XSyllabus

List the student learning outcomes for the course (Statements of what students will know and be able to do as a result of taking this course. See appended hints for constructing these statements):

1. Students will carefully analyze a political text so as to understand its argument, identify its major premises and conclusions, and comprehend its conditions and qualifications. The student should be able to evaluate critically this argument and assess its substantive claims and rhetorical context and strategy.

2. Students will be able to write well—at a minimum, to write grammatically and clearly. At an advanced level, the student should be able to articulate precisely and with some sophistication a political question, problem, issue, or debate and to analyze and evaluate it in a systematic way.

3. Students will discuss and debate intelligently fundamental political questions and ideas: to understand their historical roots and evolution, as well as their contemporary significance. To comprehend and assess the ethical dimensions of civic life, our roles as citizens, and alternative political views and principles.

Social & Behavioral Science
Component Area Option

Competency areas addressed by the course (refer to appended chart for competencies that are required and optional in each component area):
Critical Thinking:
Through a four to five page assignment, students will analyze and discuss the arguments of the texts, critically assess those arguments, and understand their rhetorical context and strategy.

Sample Essay: Your essay should be 4-5 pages in length, double-spaced, 12pt Times New Roman font, with standard margins.

1. In his Second Treatise of Government, Locke criticizes Hobbes' argument about the right of nature, and Locke defends his own alternative notion of natural rights. Hobbes would undoubtedly object to Locke's view. Adjudicate the dispute. In doing so, be sure that you (a) clearly state your argument (not your opinion) about who is right in your introduction, and (b) outline the arguments of Hobbes and Locke on the right of nature (this involves, for instance, eliciting the assumptions about human nature that both thinkers make, and then showing how they reason from these basic assumptions to their conclusions).

2. In his Second Treatise of Government, Locke criticizes Hobbes' argument about the nature of government—whereas Hobbes makes a case for the absolute rule of the sovereign, Locke defends limited government. Adjudicate the dispute. In doing so, be sure that you (a) clearly state your argument (not your opinion) about who is right in your introduction, and (b) outline the arguments of Hobbes and Locke on the nature of government (this involves, for instance, eliciting their view of the root or basis of political authority and showing how they reason from this basis to governmental power itself).

Communication Skills:
Through the above essay, students will articulate in written form complex moral and political arguments and to entertain sympathetically alternative answers to fundamental questions of moral and political life.

Empirical & Quantitative Skills:

Teamwork:

Social Responsibility:
In the above essay, students will examine the historical and theoretical roots of major ideas of the Western tradition of political thought. They are expected to comprehend the relation of these ideas to... political practice and civic life and to assess the claims of different moral and political views, both ancient and modern. Honors sections of this course also fulfill a requirement in the interdisciplinary Phronesis program in politics and ethics.

Personal Responsibility:
By engaging these seminal works of moral and political thought in the above essay, students come to understand better their own ethical and political frameworks, the role of different principles in their decision-making and choices, and the principled reasons for alternative views.

Will the syllabus vary across multiple section of the course?  X Yes  No
If yes, list the assignments that will be constant across sections:
Every section will require a paper of an interpretive and analytical character. As a Writing in the Disciplines course, every section will require assignments totaling at least 3000 words (including papers and exams). At least one piece of work will be done outside of class and returned to the student prior to the end of the semester (with comments on content, grammar, and style.)

Inclusion in the core is contingent upon the course being offered and taught at least once every other academic year. Courses will be reviewed for renewal every 5 years.

The department understands that instructors will be expected to provide student work and to participate in university-wide assessments of student work. This could include, but may not be limited to, designing instruments such as rubrics, and scoring work by students in this or other courses. In addition, instructors of core courses may be asked to include brief assessment activities in their course.

Course Synopsis
Most of us think that we live in a good regime—it's liberal, it's democratic, so what more could you ask for? Yet if its goodness is so obvious, why do we have such difficulty convincing our detractors? This course will ask the questions we rarely pose in our daily political lives—what is the good regime, the ideal against which we can measure what is our own? Does a good regime foster a good or full human life? At the same time—acknowledging that the messiness of politics forces us to moderate our ideal expectations—we will ask, what are the challenges to achieving the good regime? How much goodness can we expect out of a regime? Finally, perhaps there is no good regime at all—is everything a matter of bargaining, power, and struggle? Does might make right? Or can right be mighty?

Required Texts
Thucydides, On Justice, Power, and Human Nature (Hackett)
Plato, Gorgias (Oxford)
Machiavelli, The Prince (Hackett)
Thomas Hobbes, Leviathan (Hackett)
John Locke, Second Treatise on Government and Letter Concerning Toleration (Dover)
Jean-Jacques Rousseau, Discourse on the Origin of Inequality (Dover)
Marx and Engels, The Communist Manifesto (International Publishers)

Learning Objectives
1. Students will carefully analyze a political text so as to understand its argument, identify its major premises and conclusions, and comprehend its conditions and qualifications. The student should be able to evaluate critically this argument and assess its substantive claims and rhetorical context and strategy.
2. Students will be able to write well—at a minimum, to write grammatically and clearly. At an advanced level, the student should be able to articulate precisely and with some sophistication a political question, problem, issue, or debate and to analyze and evaluate it in a systematic way.
3. Students will discuss and debate intelligently fundamental political questions and ideas: to understand their historical roots and evolution, as well as their contemporary significance. To comprehend and assess the ethical dimensions of civic life, our roles as citizens, and alternative political views and principles.

Course Format
This course is primarily discussion based. I will lecture on some occasions to give necessary historical background, but every class will consist of a good deal of discussion. This means that you will have to read each text carefully and thoroughly. The reading assignments are all quite short, so my expectation is that you will read actively—that is, you should read and take note of what intrigues you about the text, what you find puzzling or frustrating or downright wrong. You should approach the text with the discussion questions I pose below and come to class prepared with a well thought-out answer.
Our discussion will generally have three parts: first, we will examine the argument the author is putting forth. For instance, we may ask, what are the assumptions the author brings to the table? What evidence does the author use to support his claims? Second, we will then assess the arguments. Is the author warranted in making this assumption? Is there a better way of looking at this problem than the author does? What kind of bias does the author possess and does this distort his thinking? Third, we will apply these arguments to contemporary problems and issues in our liberal democracy. Do Plato's concerns about democracy still hold true today? How would Locke respond to the recent, unprecedented government intervention during the economic crisis?

Assignments and Grading

Reading Quizzes (10% total) I will periodically give “pop quizzes” at the beginning of class. I will drop your lowest two quiz grades. An unexcused absence results in a 0 for that day’s quiz.

Essays (20% each) Two 4-5 page papers are required over the course of the term. I will distribute paper topics well in advance of the due dates. Late papers are penalized 5 points for every day they are late. Please submit these papers to the course blackboard website.

Exams (20% each) The midterm and final will consist of both short answer-identifications of key concepts or arguments and essays. I will distribute a study guide in advance of each exam.

Participation (10%) Attendance is essential for success in a participation-based class such as this one. Two unexcused absences are allowed, but each additional absence will lower your grade by one letter. Additionally, it is not enough just to show up. I expect regular, high-quality participation in classroom discussion. In order to participate intelligently, it is important to read actively, to interrogate the text and to come to class with questions, concerns, and criticisms. Extra participation opportunity is available on the course blackboard discussion page.
